Projecis Upgrades Online Chat with VoIP and File Attachment Capability along with Updates to its Meeting Center “Convene”

Projecis 2.3 employs online chat with voice and file functionality without the need to download software, while increasing team efficiency within the Projecis meeting center

San Diego – August 29, 2012 – Projecis, Inc., a content and collaboration software company, has upgraded major features of its flagship cloud-based project management platform to provide superior communication and collaboration options.

Projecis 2.3, released August 14th, brings improved utility to its online chat with Voice over Internet Protocol (VoIP) communications, saving portions of text chats as project discussions, and providing ability to attach files. These files can be downloaded or previewed from the chat window by the other chat member. Chat history is saved and the ability to “intercom” – that is, use VoIP to quickly talk – with another member locally or internationally is possible.

Chat in Projecis enables team members to discuss (both in text and voice) and share files securely with other members in a rapid manner.

The meeting center – named “Convene” in Projecis – also received an enhancement with the ability to assign action items to project members from within the meeting user interface. This is a powerful productivity tool for getting team assignments done in a timely manner. The assignments can then be found as part of the meeting details on the project calendar, and automatically posted as work items on each team member’s to-do list.

“We have seen an increase in the demand for project communication and collaboration tools which can accommodate diverse teams that may have members travelling, are consultants from other companies, or have team members located in other countries,” says Paul TanPiengco, head of marketing and business development at Projecis. “Projecis continues to stay on the cutting edge and add features to address the demands of today’s project teams.”
